Injuries Produced by Heat.

Cases of sunstroke become more fro quent in town and country with each suc eding summer. Prostration from the effects of the heat of the sun is not limited to human beings. During the past few seasons cases have been common among porses and oxeb, and even among milch ws. There is also a large increase of sickness and mortality, aside from sunstroke, that are plainly attributable to the effects of the heat of the sun during the nottest portion of the day. Travelers abformed in most other countries during this period. In all tropical and semi-tropical regions it is as common to rest for several hours during the hottest portions of the day as it is at night. Farm isborers generally aloep after they have an oil stove is kindled and extinguished metallity, so that a room is not warmed by eaten the noon meal. To make up for the time lost, they commence work earlier in the morning and continue later at night. Even in those countries in REGULATOR, by taking SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR. Europe where the climate is nearly similar to ours, and where the mass of the people are in poorer condition, less labor performed during those portions of the day when the heat is the greatest. The desire for gain is less, or the people are desire for gain is less, or the people are possessed of a greater degree of prudence. As a consequence of avoidance of the rays of the sun when they fall nearly directly on the head, there are very few cases of sunstroke and other injuries produced from the same cause. If men work according to the taste they must be considered warmer or cooler, and it generally matters little in which condition they are. Tea is very insipid when it is at the same temperature as the air in summer, but it is grateful to the taste they must be considered warmer or cooler, and it generally matters little in which condition they are a supported by means of ice. Much labor and disconfirst are according to the taste they must be considered warmer or cooler, and it generally matters little in which condition they are a supported when it is at the same temperature as the air in summer, but it is grateful to the taste they must be considered. Cure all Diseases Caused by Derangement of the Liver and Bowels. The symptoms of Liver complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; pain in the back, sides or joints, often mistaken for risumatian; court cannech; loss of appetite; bowels silternately costave and lax; head-arise; loss of memory, with a pointul sensation of having failed to do semething which ought to have appeared to the sensation of the sen ourpose of affording protection from the ava of the sun. Among them may be nentioned canopies that extend over the eats of mowing machines, harvesters, riding cultivators, sulky plows and hay rakes drawn by horses; small shades for the heads of draft animals; linings for hats that will hold a considerable amount of water, and sponges saturated with water and placed on top of the bridles of horses. All of these have been highly beneficial for the purpose for which they were designed, and their employment should become more general. The condition of animals in pasture could be rendered more comfortable by providing more shade on farms that are situated on open prairies. Trees afford the cheapest ande, and a pasture should contain a sufficient number to afford ample protection to all the stock it contains. Bass or linden or cottonwood trees grow very rapidly iding cuttivators, sulky plows and have den or cotton wood trees grow very rapidly and have a large amount of foliage. Elms nake a slower growth, but are long livers and produce much shade. A cheap proand produce much shade. A cheap pro-tection against the rays of the sun may be made by erecting an open frame of light materials and covering it with hardy vines. The American ly and wild grape vines are admirable for the purpose. The branches of trees and the foliage of vines not only protect the stock from the rays of the arm but they rander the ground the sun, but they render the ground that have no protection from the sun dur-ing the hot weather of July and August, often suffer greatly and fall off in condi-

Hogs generally gain very fittle during the summer on account of the neglect on he part of their owners to provide for neir comfort. In some cases their skin eracks open by the influence of the direct drinking but for cooling purposes, If there are no natural streams or ponds, there should be pools made in which they can wallow when they desire, They should have plenty of grass and other green food, as well as sour milk and alops. Corn and other heating articles of food should be fed sharingly. Cooling shade is essential to the comfort and well-being of hogs during the hot days of summer. Farmers who have the advantage of groves and forests located on the shores of lakes, generally have little trouble with hogs during the summer. The ground protected by the trees and bushes remains cool and moist even when that exposed to the rays of the sun is parched and hot. The streams and ponds afford water for drinking and bathing. The hog is a cleanly aulmal when it is allowed a flar chance. If a hog pasture contains no natural shade and water, they should be provided. Water can be conducted through pipes from springs and wells at a small expense, aul made to supply pools and watering troughs. Shade can be florded by straw or running vines.

PROTECTION OF THE HOUSHIGLD.

The hogs are leading to the contained to a stream and point and be shaded by straw or running vines.

FROTECTION OF THE HOUSEHOLD.

Farm houses are rarely constructed with a view to convenience in doing work or to convenience in doing work or to convenience in doing work or to convenience in the standard warm in summer. They are not supplied with water as they might be at small expense, have no means of drainago, no provisions for storing ice, and no method of ventilation except through open doors and windows. The kitchen is generally so located that the life kept in it will warm the whole house. As three hot meals are expected every kitchen is generally so located that the fire kept in it will warm the whole house.
As three hot meals are expected every day by the persons engaged in field work, and as the amount of washing and ironing to be done is very large, the fire rarely is allowed to die out in the store or range.
As a consequence, all the rooms in the house are kept hot by night as well as day, The odors of the various dishes being cooked also fill the entire dwelling.
People often go from the city to the country during hot weather to find a cool place and get the advantage of pure air. They never find either in an ordinary farmhouse. The air is impure not, it is true, from the odors rising from severs and sility alleys, but from vapors coming from cow-yards and the kitchen that forms a portion of the dwelling. In most cases the in-door laborars on a farm suffer more from the heat during the summer than the out-door isborers so. Various ways the have been contrived to protect field labor- ers from the heat of the summer sun, but no invention has been perfected to ward off the heat of cooking stoves. The kitchens of most farm-hones are places of torment during the season of hot weather. They breed disease and death.

on operations in the kitchen and washroom. It is also kept free from the ordors, rising from dishes being cooked and the vapors of the wash tub. There is some trouble in bringing food from the cooking, house to the dining room, but it is compensated for by the comfort gained. It would require but little expense to erect a building near the dwelling where all the cooking, washing, and frough beards. If ornamentation is defrough boards. If ornamentation is desummer months. The walls could be made of rough boards. If ornamentation is desired it could be done by means of vines. The only expensive portion of the building would be the roof, which, of course, should be tight and provided with spouts for carrying off the water. A building of this kind would add very much to the comfort of every family living in the country. It would relieve the dwelling of a large amount of heat, noxious vapors and country. It would relieve the dwelling of a large amount of heat, noxious vapors and noise. It would render the labor of house-keeping easy. The building would be useful at other times of the year, when heavy work, like soap-making and cap-ning fruit, is to be performed. During the cooler months of the year it would be convenient for men to use when conduct ing mechanical operations. OTHER AIDS TO COMPORT.

A large amount of discomfort may b saved during the summer months by the serve that less out-of-door labor is per- employment of oil-stoves for the prepara an oil stove is kindled and extinguished instantly, so that a room is not warmed by the heat produced before or after it is employed for cooking or laundry purposes. The use of ice during summer saves a large amount of cooking. With an ice-box or refrigerator, meat, pastry and many other articles prepared for the table may be kept several days in good.condition. No person desires to eat food or to drink fluids that are of the same temperature as the surrounding air. To be crateful to the isset they must be conduced from the same cause. It men work less hours during the day, they are able to work more years durings life, and the like is true of all animals that are trained to labor. Custom has much to do in the matter, and the custom set in this country is productive of very injurious results.

PROTECTION FROM THE SUN.

During the past few years several appliances have been introduced for the purpose of affording protection from the BELLAISE. Rather more promptly than usual, the veterans and others assembled on Central avenue Monday morning, and marched straight to the Cemetery, headed by the Bellaire band, and carrying the old battle flags. In advance rode Jas. B. Gorrell, Capt. W. H. Little, and Dr. C. E. Kurz. After short decoration ceremonies at the cemetery, the procession returned and marched to the Loan building. The houses were generally decorated. After disbanding the parade, lifty-six of the old soldiers signed a paper preparatory to the organi-zation of a post of the Grand Army of the Republic. The following committee was Republic. The following committee was appointed, to report at a meeting in the City Hall, June 13th: Levi Cassell, chairity Hall, June 13th: Levi Cassell, Chart au; S. H. loose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a haif dollar. I expended over a hundred collars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of Dr. William Hall's Balsam for the Lungs. I laughed at my friends, thinking that my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.
